

5 Objectives of obstetrics and gynecological nursing department 2025-2026

The Department of Obstetrics and Gynecological Nursing aims to:

1. Prepare qualified OB/GYN nurses with advanced scientific competences and clinical skills in maternal, newborn, and women's health, enabling them to provide safe, holistic, and patient-centered care across the childbearing cycle and throughout women's lifespan.
2. Enhance professional communication and leadership skills of students and staff to ensure effective collaboration within multidisciplinary teams, maintain a productive and safe clinical environment, and advocate for women's health rights in diverse healthcare settings.
3. Minimize risks and solve problems related to pregnancy, childbirth, postpartum, and gynecological conditions through systematic assessment, early detection of complications, and implementation of evidence-based nursing interventions.
4. Adhere to professional ethics, values, and beliefs including proficiency, honesty, equity, and respect for cultural and social diversity, while promoting dignity, privacy, and confidentiality for all female clients and their families.
5. Foster team spirit and sustainability in education and practice by engaging students in community outreach, health education programs, and initiatives that support safe motherhood and reproductive health in the community of Qalyubia Governorate and beyond.
6. Utilize evidence-based practice and modern technology such as electronic fetal monitoring, simulation labs, and health information systems to improve the quality of nursing care and clinical decision-making in obstetric and gynecological nursing.
7. Integrate information technology and modern teaching techniques in theoretical and clinical courses to develop students' critical thinking, lifelong learning abilities, and readiness for professional practice and postgraduate studies.
